I think it definitely has merit. Men are likely for a combination of natural/biological and social reasons generally much more outspoken and aggressive than women, which gives advantages in moving ahead and appearing as a "leader", fairly or not. Once, I thought I was alone in my bedroom; I turned around, saw my mother watching me, and had a full on "to the hospital" panic attack. When I recovered they told me that I smashed a desk, a bureau, and destroyed my closet doors. Given you're an Apple household, I'd personally pick up a Roku and use that with Plex; the Roku streaming sticks are only slightly more expensive than the Chromecast. The AppleTV will not work with Plex, so don't bother with that route. By far most are logos of different countries product regulatory or safety agencies. Meaning, the manufacturer submitted their product to that country agency or to an independent testing lab along with some design documentation, it passed the tests and is legally allowed to show the logo with a file number. Then I was out. I also felt the PR was vulgar and extremely unprofessional. I'm with Tomorrowful. If you want to sort and organize through stuff before putting it up on Wikipedia then you might want to consider setting up your own Mediawiki installation.
